PSD License Application Chronology and Current Status

As shareholders were informed on October 1st 2018, the wholly owned subsidiary RevoluPAY S.L. retained the prestigious law firm, Hogan Lovells, to assist with the petition of a proprietary, Central Bank issued, European PSD license. Subsequently, CEO of RevoluPAY, Alfredo Manresa, along with Hogan Lovells Counsel, met with the Central Bank on November 7th 2018. Subsequently, the formal petition for the PSD license was submitted by Hogan Lovells on November 19th 2018, with a formal receipt of the petition having been received on November 22, 2018 and, subject to a statutory approval time, for the said application, of 90 days. On November 25th 2018, the central bank adopted the new legislation associated with the PSD2 European Banking Directive. On 4 December 2018, Hogan Lovells received preliminary positive feed-back from Central Bank concerning the application. On December 20th 2018, RevoluPAY concluded the update of the RevoluPAY payment app to meet the stringent PSD2 two factor authentication requirements. On February 15th 2019, the wholly owned subsidiary RevoluPAY S.L. concluded the final requisite, by increasing its paid-up share capital to 250k Euro (Approx. 375k $CA), in anticipation of the central bank PSD2 license approval. On February 20th 2019, the company informed shareholders of the update it had received from Hogan Lovells concerning the PSD2 license petition, in which the law firm provided the 08th March 2019, as a tentative date for a response from the Central Bank. On March 8th 2019, Hogan Lovells informed the company that it had contacted the central bank on March 6th 2019 and, were informed directly, that the license application was proceeding correctly. On March 19th 2019 the Company received a direct call, at 5.50pm CET, from the Head of License Authorizations of the Central Bank, concerning the impending PSD2 license approval. During the call, the senior department of authorizations official explained to Mr. Manresa that the bank had preferred to call directly to explain that the slight approval delay is associated with the sheer volume of departmental work underway, however, that between Thursday 28th and Friday 29th of March 2019, the central bank would issue a written communication to RevoluPAY® concerning the PSD2 license petition. As no communication was received from the Central Bank, the Company contacted Hogan Lovells on April 2nd, 2019. On April 3rd 2019, Hogan Lovells, in a written correspondence, communicated to the Company that they had physically met with the Central on Monday 1st April 2019 and, that the Central Bank had informed them that, at the latest, Wednesday April 3rd 2019 Hogan Lovells would receive a communication from the Central Bank concerning the license petition. Today, Hogan Lovells informed the Company that on April 08th 2019 at 17.25 CET, they sent a formal written request for an update to the Central Bank, providing a copy of the said communication, between Hogan Lovells and, multiple departmental divisions of the Central Bank, to the Company. In the cited communication, Hogan Lovells lead counsel, expresses his disappointment as to not having received the numerous promised responses and, urges the Central Bank to provide an update forthwith. However, the Company wishes to express that, in managements opinion, the Central Bank has evidently been subject to enormous changes, upon implementation of the PSD2 licensing, just a few days after the Company applied for its PSD license in November 2018 and, during every communication with both the Company and, Hogan Lovells, the bank has explained this dilemma willingly and, has always been very forthcoming with the acceptance that this change in law has delayed numerous matters, concerning license approvals, post PSD2 implementation.
